Safety First

When did your Dive Guides last renew their EFR certifications or practice their EFR skills? What if the only EFR trained person on the boat has an accident? Does the boat crew know what to do in case of an accident, how to resuscitate a patient or simply stem bleeding? What about your staff in the dive base, restaurant and other areas of your site? Who of your staff can set-up and apply the emergency oxygen kit? Do they know how to prevent the dangers associated with oxygen?

Regardless of all possible precaution, accidents or injuries may occur during a dive trip or on land. From minor incidents like a cut, itching skin from contact with marine life, more severe situations like choking from a piece of food in the windpipe or a heat stroke to decompression sickness or heart attacks. So you better be prepared so that your staff – on the boat and on land – can take appropriate action and help.

We are certified Emergency First Response Instructors (First and Secondary Care, incl. Care for Children, CPR and AED) as well as Emergency Oxygen Provider Instructors. After our courses and refresher workshops your staff will not only have gathered or updated the required knowledge: by training in realistic scenarios and practicing CPR and AED with our puppet, they will also feel confident to help in case of emergency.

Superior Dive Experience

Yes, we have some pretty spectacular dive sites in Fiji. Some sites require extra skills to fully enjoy them: who wants to dive the Great White Wall without a current? At some spots you need to go a little bit deeper. And during the night your guests can enjoy a completely different marine life experience compared to the day dive.

Your dive guides know how to dive these spots. But some of your guests might be fresh Open Water Divers or they have never dived in a stronger current or during the night. By certifying your guides as PADI Specialists we equip them with the knowledge to give better briefings and pre-empt any stress that your guests might experience, thereby enhancing safety and fun during the dives. A specialty diver course takes only one day - a small but powerful investment in your differentiation.

Your guides get cold in winter? Why not try dry suit diving? Our PADI specialties provide additional business options for you. You can also use them as an incentive for your valued staff.
