Safety First

When did your Dive Guides last renew their EFR certifications or practice their EFR skills? What if the only EFR trained person on the boat has an accident? Does the boat crew know what to do in case of an accident? Or your staff in the dive base, the restaurant and other areas of your site? Who of your staff can to set-up and use the emergency oxygen kit? Do they know how to prevent the dangers associated with oxygen?

Even with all possible precaution, accidents or injuries may occur during a dive trip or on land. From minor incidents like a cut in the finger, itching skin from contact with marine life, more severe situations like chocking from a piece of food in the wind pipe or a heat stroke to decompression sickness or heart attacks.
So you better be prepared so that your staff – on the boat and on land – can take appropriate action and help.

We are fully certified Emergency First Response Instrcutors (First and Secondary Care, incl. Care for Children, CPR and AED) as well as Emergency Oxygen Provider Instructors. During our courses or refresher workshops, your staff will gather the knowledge and train it in realistic scenarios. They will also practice CPR and AED with our puppet.

Improve Dive Experience

Yes, we have some pretty spectacular dive sites in Fiji. And your dive guides surely know these spots inside out. Some dive sites require extra skills to fully enjoy them. Who wants to dive the Great White Wall without a current? For some spots you might need to go a little bit deeper. And during the night your guests can enjoy a completely different marine life experience than during the day.
Your dive guides know how to dive these spots. But how about your guests? Some of your dive guests might be fresh Open Water Divers or they never dove in a somewhat stronger current or during the night. With a good and thorough briefing your guides can provide an awesome dive experience. Being a Specialty Diver equips your dive guides with the know-how to conduct better briefings and increase the safety of your guests during the dives. So why not train your dive staff to become a PADI Dift, Deep and/or Night Specialty Diver?

Improving the free diving skills with the new PADI Freediver certification will allow your dive guides to be more qualified during snorkelling tours.
Knowing about the specifics of taking pictures and videos under water, opens up the opportunity to offer photo and video documentation of your dives.
Your guides are cold during the winter months? Why not try dry suit diving?
